L. 937633 is a 1974 law that ended all ties between the National Transportation Safety Board and the U.S. Department of Transportation. It makes the Board independent of the Department and significantly strengthens its powers. The Board is empowered to investigate accidents and incidents that occur on or within the nation's transportation systems. The Board's investigations are conducted by a specially trained staff of investigators and safety analysts. The Board's reports contain recommendations for preventing future accidents and incidents. The Board's recommendations are not binding, but they are often adopted by the Department of Transportation or other federal agencies. The Board is also authorized to conduct research and development on transportation safety and to provide technical assistance to states.
